

Short Introduction to Moodle

Moodle is a software system that allows students and instructors to interact in a password-protected environment. It has many possible uses, but the main one for our purposes is to distribute solution sets and other copyrighted material in a way that follows copyright laws.

To access Moodle through the WWW, go to <http://moodle.upei.ca>, and click on login. If you are not registered for Moodle, follow the instructions, giving it a username (which you should choose to be the same as your Novell username) and a password. Once you are logged into the system, check the list of courses on the left hand side of the screen. Select the course you want (e.g., Math 112A). The first time you access a particular course, the system will prompt you for an “enrolment key” that you should have obtained from your instructor. You will only have to enter the key once, and afterwards the system will remember that you are enrolled for that course.

Once you have entered the area for your course, you will see a weekly outline containing the available resources. Just click on the one that you want.

To exit the system, click on logout.
